

Focus on the positive.

Ask questions that might help each other, that will elevate your work to a higher level, and acknowledge those things that seem to work really well.

Questions the presenter might ask of the group:

What is my (the presenter's) vision / story?

What message did you come away with?

What are your take aways from my presentation?

What in my presentation did you like, question, want to know more about?

Questions the presenter might consider based upon the above responses from the group:

Was my intended message clearly understood?

Did my audience see and hear the same things I did?

What are the three most important things I want my audience to take away? Did they?

What technology went into developing, was it supporting or distracting?

What three things did my audience say they liked?

What gaps did my audience identify?

Did my presentation spark any interests or desire to know more?
